I want to import all the modules in my project into a depset, so that I can get access to all of them (and their variables/etc) in a single file. This would be more convenient for managing my project. What's the proper way to do this? I've attempted to do this with the module in package.json: "dependencies": { "module-a": "0.0.1", "module-b": "0.0.1" } Then do a npm link -l module-a and npm link -l module-b. However when I go to import a variable from module-a into module-b, module-b will tell me that module-a is undefined. What is the proper way to accomplish this? A: You can use npm link in your package.json to point to the folder containing your packages. Then you can access all modules using: npm link If you have a package.json in your root directory, you can reference them as follows: npm link my-package
