KeyMacro is a macro recorder designed to record database actions. KeyMacro records user input from the keyboard as the user types. Each time a database user presses a key on the keyboard, KeyMacro records the associated keystrokes. The keystrokes and cursor movements can be saved as individual keystrokes or as key sequences (mapping of multiple keystrokes into one action). The macro can also store multiple actions in a single macro or multiple macros in a single action. After recording, the data can be easily edited. KeyMacro makes it possible to rewind and replay macro actions. It also allows one-keystroke editing. This means that the macro can be modified on one keystroke without having to rewind the macro. The macro can be saved as a text file, where each record is a separate line. Each keystroke and each key sequence can also be saved as a separate file. Each action can be labeled with a name that helps to understand the purpose of the action. This action name can also be used to select the action when replaying. Labels can also be applied to groups of related actions. KeyMacro saves the actions on the system hard drive. Therefore, the macros are persistent. That is, the action will be retained when the system is restarted. KeyMacro runs in the Microsoft Windows environment.
